

PASTORAL PLAN FOR CHURCH COMMUNICATION

United States Catholic Conference
1997

Introduction

Communication and community lie at the heart of the Church's mission because God's self-revelation draws every believer into the faith community. After the family, people experience the Church first in the local parish, where bonds of charity begin and where the worshiping community takes shape. This occurs through communication: the sharing of faith, the preaching of the Word, the celebration of the sacraments, service to the poor and marginalized, and the union of the larger body. All church communication—even her technologically or mass-mediated communication—should flow from the foundation of God's self-revelation. Human communication in the Church mirrors the communication of the Trinity, the Divine community, in whom we discover the fullness of communion and communication.

The Church, formed by the Word of God, nourished by that Word, and given life by the Spirit, seeks through her communication to make real the desire for communion, the formation of community, the proclamation of God's word, and the voice of God's little ones. She recognizes that modern society increasingly defines itself by communication—newspapers, magazines, books, telecommunications, radio, television, film, electronic mail, digital media—and, mindful of Christ's command that she preach the Gospel to the ends of the earth (Mt 28:19), asks once again how she can image and echo God in this world.

In her formal reflections, the Church has long acknowledged that communication media have a role in fostering community and in spreading the Gospel. "The media of social communication can contribute a great deal to human unity" (Communio et Progressio, 9). "The Church would feel guilty before the Lord if she did not utilize these powerful means that human skill is daily rendering more perfect. It is through them that she proclaims 'from the housetops' the message of which she is the depositary" (Evangelii Nuntiandi, 45). "Since the very evangelization of modern culture depends to a great extent on the influence of the media, it is not enough to use the media simply to spread the Christian message and the Church's authentic teaching. It is also necessary to integrate that message into the 'new culture' created by modern communications. This is a complex issue, since the 'new culture' originates not just from whatever content is eventually expressed, but from the very fact that there exist new ways of communicating, with new languages, new techniques, and a new psychology" (Redemptoris Missio, 37).

Such communication becomes all the more urgent in the United States today with its variety of cultures and socioeconomic levels, its debates over public communication, and its powerful communication environment. Despite all the advantages this country enjoys, the United States has become a culture that diminishes the importance of faith. Many need to hear the word of God; believers need to encourage one another in their faith. As an institution and as individuals, the Church and her members must communicate their faith: Communication does not lie on the
