

INTRODUCTION

Definitions

- Rapid Rural Appraisal (RRA) can be described as "a semi-structured activity carried out in the field by a multidisciplinary team and designed to acquire quickly new information on, and new hypotheses about, rural life" (McCracken et al. 1988 in RUAF, 2004.).
- An RRA study aims at generating information on rural life and conditions that is relevant, timely, accurate and usable in a cost-effective way.
- Participatory Rural Appraisal (PRA) is a methodology for interacting with villagers or a community, understanding them and learning from them. It involves a process of communicating with them using a set of menu of methods that seek community participation.
- Besides enabling outsiders to obtain information about the communities, PRA is intended to enable the community members to conduct and share their own investigations and analysis.
- The role of the outsider is that of a catalyst, a facilitator of processes within a community which is prepared to alter their situation. (Adapted from the FAO PRA Tool box)
