Contracting for Public Services Penelope J. Brook, Suzanne Smith, 2001-01-01 A new book published by the World Bank's Private Sector Advisory Services outlines an innovative approach to delivering development assistance for public basic services such as potable water safe sanitation modern energy and primary education and healthcare Called output based aid the approach delegates service delivery to the non profit or for profit private sector under contracts that tie payments to the outputs or results actually delivered to target beneficiaries The book gathers cases of innovative output based approaches from across the infrastructure and social sectors and also provides a checklist for designing and implementing output based schemes From the World Bank website Urban Livelihoods Tony Lloyd-Jones, Carole Rakodi, 2014-10-14 One of the most promising approaches to poverty reduction in developing countries is to encourage sustainable livelihoods for the poor This takes account of their opportunities and assets and the sources of their vulnerability Based on recent and extensive research this volume thoroughly assesses the value of the livelihoods approach to urban poverty The book reviews the situation and strategies of the urban poor and identifies the policies and practical programmes that work best Lasting improvements depend not just on economic development but on political commitment and structures that are responsive to the claims and needs of different groups of poor people

Constructing Development Bjorn Harald Nordtveit, 2009-08-24 Former World Bank education specialist Bjorn Nordtveit argues in this groundbreaking study that a development project or policy should not be understood and analyzed as a linear system Instead he believes we should view it as a complex and dialectical organism Basing his theories on post development and complexity theories as well as New Institutional Economics Nordtveit lays out a novel method of analyzing development both on the ground and in the think tank Informed by detailed quotations from interviews with local people involved in a World Bank literacy project in Senegal the author demonstrates how a project is entangled in the global economy and how it constructs development through a discourse of gender equity growth of the civil society and promotion of the use of private provision of social services Nordtveit's new analytical methodology claims it is necessary for all development initiatives to first investigate whether the donors vision of development coincides with national and local notions of development Only then can the holistic and complex interrelations between the project and all other development desires and services in the community be studied Finally the project's cost effectiveness must be considered The author also examines the strengths and weaknesses of public private partnerships which are being used ever more frequently by donor agencies to implement social services Constructing Development is a tour de force Going back and forth between the global and the local it examines a World Bank women's literacy project in Senegal through a critical and integrated discussion of education and development globalization gender civil society and privatization Nordtveit offers an insightful and innovative critique of development theory and practice drawing on new authors and fields such as Complexity Theory His book is a must read across a number of fields including comparative and international education adult education
