

Garrett Hardin

From Darwin to the present, all scientific thought upon the relationship among all organisms (the biosphere) and the rest of nature has been based upon the idea of competition for limited resources. When resources are limited, the most successful organisms are those that are best adapted to the environment. This is the principle of natural selection. It is the basis of all evolutionary thought. It is the basis of all scientific thought upon the relationship among all organisms (the biosphere) and the rest of nature.
