✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Core strengths as a speaker

A public speaker needs to have certain skills and strengths. To begin with, I connect with my listeners easily. My second strength is the ability to tell a good story. This makes my speeches inspirational and exciting. I always have an ethical behavior as a speaker. My critical thinking skills make my speeches and arguments true, meaningful, and acceptable. I am also generous and confident. I use these strengths to motivate my listeners. I also have good organizational, decision-making, and communication skills. My time management skills make me a successful public speaker.

Incorporating the strengths to develop a unique style

Every public speaker should develop a good public speaking philosophy. I always use my strengths to develop the best public speaking style. I am also confident and focused. I always embrace the best ethical behaviors and practices. I also use acceptable words when giving my speeches. I always manage my time effectively in order to deliver the best message to my audience. I also motivate, mentor, and empower my listeners. My story-telling approach makes my speeches meaningful and enjoyable to the listeners.

Ethical implications of public speaking

Every public speaker should understand the importance of ethical practices and behaviors. The audience should be able to trust the speaker. The speaker should not distort facts and information. The speaker needs to observe every social or moral norm in the society. The speaker should present original points without plagiarism. Such ethical practices are critical because they can make someone a professional speaker. Any unethical practice will affect the reputation of a speaker. The speaker will also face
