

ARTERIAL PULSE

DEFINITION

- Pulse is a Greek word meaning 'move to and fro'.
- Arterial pulse is a wave produced by cardiac systole traversing in the peripheral direction in the arterial tree at a rate faster than the column blood.
- ❖ The pulse wave consists of two positive deflections during systole (upstroke) and one deflection during diastole (descending limb). The shoulder during systole is the 'percussion wave' due to the arrival of the impulse generated by LV ejection; the second is the 'tidal wave' due to reflection from upper part of the body. Whereas the 'dicrotic or diastolic wave' is due to reflection from the lower part of the body.
